75 THOU ARTHUR.

we chronicled in the last issue of our paper. We have assembled here this afternoon to sympathize with those who mourn, and to perform the last sad offices for one whom you have known these many years. In this hour when the sable mantle of mourning has drawn its heavy folds around us, when grief fills the heart, and tears the eyes. sometimes silence expresses our sentiments more fully and crathfully than words. In this time of affliction, we would lift these hearts which sorrow as we cannot, for this parting, up out of the darkness and gloom which overshadows and shuts out the sunshine and joy-

Our sympathy, our regards, we express in low, tender words and in kindly acts, yet the troubled heart remains burdened, crushed, and cries for comfort and help. At this time, when we realize so keenly our own weakness, we are glad that we can say to these suddenly afflicted ones, there is One who can comfort and help you. Having been reviled, having been compelled to suffer privation and death in their cruelest forms, He knows what suffering means. And to-day GRISTS PROMPTLY GROUND. He stands beside thee. Oh sorrowing one with heart as tender as when He wept with Mary and Martha, gently whispering, "Cast all the burden on Me, for He careth for "Thou art weak as the bending reed but I will support and strengthen thee; thou dost feel forsaken, but fear not for I am with thee, and be not dismayed for I am thy God". Whenever the soul realizes the truth of these promises, and accepts Christ's proffered sympathy and love it enters into possession of the needed strength, comfort and peace.

Standing in the presence of death, no words of mine are needed to emphasize the truth that time is precious and right living important.

The broad beautiful river was sweeping on in its with its invented chant, "Forever!" thrilling the silent night.

As we pass not this way again, we should learn that nothing is insignificant or without value. The flickering ray of sanlight warms and vitalizes the earth, the kind word so willingly spoken cheers the heart and lightens the toil. Indeed life is made up of tritles, of individual acts and words. Of these, if we desire life to be symmetrical, we should be careful to select only the best, for should be careful to select only the best, for as the vulnerable need of Achilles imperilled his life, as one defeating balak to his life, as one defective brick has sometimes ruined the building, or as the tiny rill of water flowing unnoticed through the dyke overflows the land, so the entrance into the

Since thus life touches life and soul intertwines soul, we should diligently seek to be Christlike in thought and in deed,

Dear friends, the boy whom you have known these years; the boy who was once the pride and the joy of his mother's life, lies before us with folded palms, with motionless lips, and the light of his hopes unfed. Perchance he thought that life was a flower with poisoned breath, a burden he could not lift, a problem he could not solve, a book he could not read, so he closed it.

Pityingly we forgive the last sad act and liumbly we pray that He whose pity is greater and whose love is deeper than ours, may also forgive. To-day we would remember only his bright, sunny face, his genial manners, his generous disposition, his faithfulness to the interests of those with whom he was identified, his honesty, and the tender regard in which he held his friends.

To you, mother, sister, brother, and you, Rose, who hath realized that love lieth deep; that it dwelleth not in lip depths, let me say that there is seldom a line of glory written upon earth's face but a line of suffering runs parallel; that life is not all of joy nor all of sorrow, but a mingling of the two. Wait patiently, remembering that
